

Dear Writer,

Well, this is my final letter to you and my farewell. I enjoyed getting acquainted with your writing and discovering something new about you every week without actually meeting you.

I want to let you know that I was so pleased with your direct improvements. You made obvious growth. Your writing showed that you applied what I suggested, which pleased me very much. I suggested for you to expand on how you felt when your first bike got ruined, to tell me why the price of the bike your dad got you was significant, and to tell me more about what you do and where you go when you ride bikes. All of these you addressed and more.

I hope our correspondence helped you with your writing, not only for your class but beyond. I feel that you can easily take what I wrote to you and apply it to your future writing assignments.

Good luck with your schooling and enjoy your summer vacation!

Sincerely,

Your Reader
